The Cuckolds Council Thanks Knickerbocker Woodworking for Custom Doors

Knickerbocker Woodworking, the cabinet shop of Knickerbocker Group, is designing and constructing three mahogany entrance doors for the Cuckolds Fog Signal and Light Station. These doors will cover the principal light station entrances and will replicate the original doors. Knickerbocker Woodworking is generously donating the doors to the Cuckolds Council to assist in the rebuilding and restoration of the Light Station.

According to Philip Yasinski, Cuckolds Council coordinator, “From the very beginning of the Cuckolds Rescue in 2004, Steve Malcom, of the Knickerbocker Group, has been an enthusiastic supporter. He joined the Cuckolds Council, took time to become informed about the initiative, offered his ideas and assistance, and became someone we could turn to for advice and counsel.”

When asked why he and his company were interested in this project, Malcom said, “The restoration of the Cuckolds light is a great opportunity for the Knickerbocker Group to join with Erick Marden and others to preserve an important Boothbay Region landmark. I am very pleased to have the chance to contribute to the excellent work that Eric and his talented team have begun. This kind of collaboration is what makes our community tick!”

Steve Malcom and the Knickerbocker Group have been in the business of building and renovating fine homes throughout the state of Maine for over thirty years. In addition to custom carpentry and woodworking, they offer architectural design, civil engineering, cabinet making, and property management. Steve wears more hats than just his signature Knickerbocker ball cap. According to Yasinski, “We first got to know Steve many years ago, as a driving force in helping spur the Opera House rescue. He has built his life and career caring about the Boothbay Region, the organizations and people who help create community. We are grateful for his civic leadership and community spirit.”
